DESCRIPTION

Information is powerful but complicated. Using information successfully academically and in everyday life involves understanding the format, context and purpose of information, as well as the information creators' perspective and point of view, and level of expertise.

Students develop confidence in their ability to find and evaluate information in a variety of formats as they learn to challenge misinformation and learn how  information works both in academics and beyond.

PCC's Library courses are designed to help students understand why connecting with the Library will be useful for academic and lifelong success. Students will learn how information is created and evaluated; how they can build on their roles as creators and consumers of information; and how using search strategies and search tools can lead to new knowledge and confidence as an information seeker.
